OPENMIND

As we become further entrenched in our information echo chambers, we're losing a shared set of facts and a shared sense of reality.

We don't just disagree with people who differ from us, we see them as evil and dangerous. These trends pose enormous threats to our democracy, and stymie our progress towards a just and equitable future.

At Open Mind, we work to address these challenges by building practical, scalable and evidence-based tools to equip people with the habits of heart and mind to communicate and collaborate across differences.

I see a future where we all recognize our shared humanity and treat every individual with dignity and respect, where we embrace our differences as strengths, and where we come together across our differences, to solve our collective problems and build a better future together.
