

John Wood Jr.

BRAVER ANGELS

I see a future where the American people recognize themselves in one another. We see in one another interests that we share as a society. And therefore we apply the moral wisdom that we should love our neighbors as we love ourselves to the spirit of our politics, because we recognize that the well-being of our fellow Americans, is intimately intertwined with the well-beings of we, ourselves, our families, and the people that we live closest to.

In an America like this, our politics becomes collaborative, our institutional culture becomes inclusive. And in that spirit, our larger society becomes oriented around social and material progress, without the hindrance of prejudice across all of our lines of division.